Progress:

I started writing my dissertation. I made a list of the topics I need to cover. I used my interim report as a basis. I copied it and began marking the things I need to change.

Now it will look like this:

- Abstract (NEW)
- Background and Introduction (CHANGE)
- Literature Review
- Exploration of Data and Methodology (CHANGE)
- Results and Discussion (NEW)
- Conclusions and Future Work (NEW)

Right now, I'm writing about methodology. Even though I'm a little ahead of schedule, I feel like I underestimated this final phase. It's taking me an awfully long time to realise what's already been done and what needs to be written up properly. I hope it's just nerves and that it will turn out well.

I sent my supervisor an email, but I haven't received a reply. I'll wait and see how things develop. If I don't hear back by next week, I'll write to him again.

Result:

I was able to outline the individual sections of my dissertation and complete the section on the methodology for the second phase.

Next Step:

- Finish part with methodology
- Start with Results and Discussion
- Possibly email my supervisor again if there will be no response
- Look at the code and start writing proper markdowns of the interpretation
